

Dear Prospective Scholar,

The Canon Collins Educational and Legal Assistance Trust (CCELAT) and its alumni have compiled this booklet to assist you on your postgraduate study journey.

Research, funded by the Irish Embassy in Pretoria, highlighted the need for scholarship opportunities in Zimbabwe. In response, CCELAT alumni in Zimbabwe have undertaken to 'pay it forward' through compiling this booklet to share opportunities and create pathways into postgraduate scholarship for others.

The booklet is divided into 3 sections:

- Section 1 offers general guidance on applying for a scholarship and choosing the right programme for you;
- Section 2 offers advice on scholarship interviews;
- Section 3 provides detailed information on a range of scholarships open to Zimbabweans at Masters and PhD level of study. (A few scholarships related to Bachelor level study are also included.)

The information in this booklet draws on Canon Collins Trust's 35 years of rich experience in awarding and administering scholarships. The Trust offers the following Masters and PhD scholarships:

- i. Canon Collins Scholarships for postgraduate study in South Africa.
- ii. Canon Collins Scholarships for Masters study in the UK.
- iii. University of London Scholarships for Master of Laws by distance learning.

You will find more detailed information on these scholarships in Section 3 of this booklet.

We hope you find this booklet a useful resource, and wish you every success with your postgraduate scholarship journey.

SECTION 1

General guidance on finding and applying for scholarships

Finding the right scholarship and applying successfully is the first step in your exciting postgraduate study journey. Below are a few tips to help you find a scholarship that best suits you, and help you apply with the best chance for success.

Finding Scholarships

Choose your search words carefully

When searching for scholarships on the internet, it is important to use key words such as “Zimbabwe”, “Zimbabwean”, “Scholarships”, “Masters”, and “PhD” (or your desired level of study). You can also use key words that relate to what you want to study, for example “social development scholarships”. If you are the first person studying in your family you can search “first-in-family” scholarships, which could be a good entry point.

Useful websites

www.scholars4dev.com is a useful website listing multiple scholarships with information on eligibility, value of funding and links to the original scholarship websites. You can also look into scholarships by the Swiss, Zimbabwean, Italian, Japanese, German and Holland governments. The Andrew W. Mellon Foundation also provides a large number of scholarships. If you are part of a church organisation or a student group, find out if they are giving out any scholarships.

This booklet presents you with a wide range of scholarships, but we recommend that you do further research for yourself as scholarship details and availability can change.

Choose a scholarship that best suits you and your needs

There are hundreds of scholarships available – each with different locations of study, entry requirements, funding offers, time periods and subject choices. It is important to narrow your search.

- Be honest about what will best suit you. Is the University applicable the right fit for you? Does it offer the courses you want to pursue, or are you willing to change them based on what the scholarship offers?

If you are applying for a PhD, it is particularly important to ensure that the institution where you intend to pursue your research is the right fit for you. Do not apply simply because there is a scholarship available!

- Ask yourself if the scholarship meets your needs. Do you have children or are you the breadwinner? Does the scholarship cover the full costs of your study and if not, will you be able to secure additional funding elsewhere?
- Consider your eligibility for the scholarship criteria. Do you have the grades required? Is your nationality a fit? Do not waste your time applying if you do not meet the criteria or if the subject or level of study you are looking to pursue is not offered.

The best chance for success

Choosing the right scholarship is not only about what is best suited for you, but also about whether you will be successful.

- Consider applying for local scholarships first. Being local could give you an advantage over other applicants.

- ❑ Scholarships offering smaller awards may give you a greater chance of success. Many students look for scholarships with the most funds available, but these are also likely to be the most competitive. Smaller awards may not cover everything, but can help with university costs, supplies and living expenses.
- ❑ Opt for scholarships with narrow eligibility criteria, such as a particular geographic location, or nationality or restricted subject areas, or which require membership in a particular organization. (Make sure you meet the requirements!)
- ❑ Apply for less popular scholarships. If you are considering studying abroad, research scholarships available in countries that tend to attract less foreign students. Many countries (other than the UK, the US and Australia) have large scholarship schemes, and these are considerably less competitive.
- ❑ Make sure your application is well written and supported with all required documentation. If you are willing to go the extra mile and spend more time on your application, you already have a greater chance!

The Application

Different scholarships have different application requirements (from certified copies of documents to application fees) and the process of putting together an application can be tedious! Do not let this discourage you! As mentioned, putting in the time and effort into your application will maximise your chances of success. You need to ensure that you submit all the required documentation and show in writing that you are a good fit for the scholarship.

Common application requirements:

- ❑ Completed scholarship application form. Make sure you have proofread the document, corrected spelling errors, and filled in all the relevant information.
- ❑ Copy of passport / identity document. Your passport / ID must be valid for at least six months after your departure date, and must be a copy of only the page containing your photo and personal details. To be safe, certify the copy.
- ❑ Copies of transcripts / past degrees. This includes all your prior academic records.
- ❑ Proof of English language proficiency (or other language relevant to the medium of instruction for the study programme you chose). Many universities overseas will require you to show evidence that you are proficient in English. Although many scholarships do not require proof of language proficiency at the time of applying, you will have to provide this prior to commencing your studies if your application is successful.
- ❑ Statement of purpose / Letter of motivation. This is often a one-page letter of approximately 400 words (confirm the length asked for in the requirements), in which you explain why you have applied for the course and how it relates to your career goals. You must also explain your personal qualities and why you will be a good fit for the scholarship and subject choice.
- ❑ Letter/s of recommendation. You are usually required to submit one (or more) letters or recommendation. This letter can come from past lecturers, employers, managers or even a person that has supervised you. Volunteer work often also counts. This letter gives the scholarship provider more information about your qualities, skills, and intellectual competence. Choose your referee carefully, as your reference letter can determine whether your application gets shortlisted for an interview.

SECTION 2

Interview Tips

Scholarships are often very competitive and meeting the requirements does not necessarily guarantee you an interview. If your application is shortlisted for the interview stage, plan ahead and do not underestimate the preparation.

Doing research is critical to the success of your interview. What you will research will vary from one interview to the next. Start by reviewing the requirements for the scholarship, and your submitted application. (Make sure you keep a copy of everything you submit.) The application questions can give you good insight into what might be asked on the day, and reviewing your answers will help to refresh your memory so that you answer the interview questions more effectively.

You should also research the organisation or institution offering the scholarship. Have a look at the 'About Us' page of their website, and even past events or other programmes they offer. This will give you a good understanding of their priorities, and the kind of scholars they are looking for.

The questions below are common ones that you may encounter in an interview. Think about what might be an adequate and appropriate response that addresses the question in sufficient depth. Avoid being vague, and give concrete examples where possible. While planning and preparation are essential, your responses should still be spontaneous, rather than a 'learned speech'. Take the time to practice your responses, perhaps with a friend, to ensure that you will float through the questions on the day.

Most frequently asked questions:

1. Tell us something about yourself.

The interviewers want to get a better sense of who you are as an individual. Your answer should set you apart from other applicants and make your interview more personal. Your interviewers do not want to hear a brief overview of your life story, but rather information about you that is not found in your application documents. Try to tell them something that will make you stand out when they are reviewing your interview at a later stage. This could be a particular talent or passion you have, something about your family history or anything of which you are proud.

2. Why do you want to study at this institution? Why have you chosen this course to study?

Interviewers will want to know why you want to study a particular course or at a particular university, so make sure you can explain this clearly. Research your institution of choice and make sure you can clearly – and passionately – state your reasons for applying there. There must be no doubt in the interviewer's minds that you want to be there and you want to study what you have applied for.

3. What do you want to accomplish in your life?

Be honest and realistic about your life goals. State these as clearly as you can, explaining how you intend to accomplish your goals and how your studies will help you to do that. Avoid coming across as unfocused by sharing too many goals, and avoid clichés (such as 'I want to end world hunger').

4. Where do you see yourself in five - ten years from now?

You may be asked where you see yourself in the next five, ten years or even fifteen years. Know what your future goals are, and what you want to have accomplished by when. Your answer should show that you can set goals and that you have ambition and drive to achieve them.

5. How do you plan to use your scholarship?

This question gives you a chance to show whether you are going to spend the money wisely and how giving you the scholarship will be a worthwhile investment. Therefore, it is important to tell them how you are planning on using the money, and if possible, to demonstrate this. You can prepare a budget for your studies, showing all your estimated expenses. Include other sources of income from your family or a part time job as well. This is sure to impress the panel and show them that you are actively trying to keep your student debt to a minimum. At your interview, make sure you have copies of your budget in case the panel wants to have a closer look or even keep a copy for review later.

6. How would your friends / teachers / employers describe you?

One way to answer this question is to refer to your reference letters (if these are not confidentially submitted). For example, you can tell the panel that your lecturers find you hard working and dedicated, which you know from their letters of reference.

7. We only have a limited number of scholarships to offer. Why should you receive it over another applicant? (Why do you deserve the scholarship?)

Once again, your answer here should set you apart from other applicants. There is no perfect way to answer this question, but try to avoid bragging about your academic results or how many clubs you belonged to in your previous university. This is because everyone that has made it to the interview will likely have the same academic achievements as you. Make your case as a worthy recipient based on other accomplishments, your good work ethic, or your hardworking nature. Show your passion for the subject or research area you wish to pursue, and convince the panel of your potential for future success.

8. What can you do for our organisation/university? What is your contribution?

The panel will want to know how they will benefit from you as a student and/or a future graduate or alumnus. You need to be able to show a willingness to give back. Research what the organisation or institution values in terms of giving back, either during your studies or after completion.

9. What is your greatest strength/weakness?

Your answer should give the panel insight into how self-aware you are. How you are able to overcome your weaknesses, and/or shine through your strengths. This question is not intended to undermine your ability, but is rather an opportunity to show how you manage your weaknesses. It shows how you are attempting to improve on certain things, or overcome an obstacle. For example, you may struggle to work in a team because you like to have control over your environment and are a perfectionist. Your weakness is control, but you are learning to handle this better by choosing to take a back seat when team leaders are being chosen. When talking about your strengths, do not be humble about owning them.

10. Tell me about a mistake you made.

Just like question nine, your answer should show that you are self-aware. The panel understands that nobody is perfect and wants to see if you are able to learn from your mistakes. When answering, once again use concrete examples and avoid being vague. Explain what your lesson was, how you have grown as a person, and how it has influenced your life.

11. What activities are you involved in?

The panel will be interested in the ways in which you are active outside of your studies. This is a great opportunity to talk about activities that are relevant to the scholarship and other things that matter to you. You might want to talk about your involvement in groups or civil society activities or you may want to show how you can work in a team, and demonstrate your strong work ethic.

12. Tell me about a personal achievement that makes you proud.

A good answer will focus on a recent example of something you struggled with and overcame. It should be something that makes you proud, but will also make them proud. Avoid talking about achievements from your childhood or teenage years.

13. Is there anything else you want to add?

You are now given the opportunity to ask or comment on anything you do not feel was sufficiently covered in the interview questions, or something you were not able to research about the scholarship or your selected study institution. You may also feel the need to add something you might have forgotten to say earlier. Make sure your comments and questions are appropriate and in context.

Asking questions is also an opportunity to show the panel that you are interested in the organisation and that you are looking for a good fit. Plan and research your questions in advance before asking them. You do not want to ask a question that would have been easily found on their website. Although you can ask questions to get further insight about the information you found. For example, if the website shows you all the previous scholars who have attended the university, you can ask questions about the scholar's involvement now and how you could get involved once your scholarship has ended. It is important to keep questions relevant to the interview.

Some questions you might ask:

- ? What does your organization hope to accomplish in providing this scholarship?
- ? What other programmes does your organization support in order to achieve your objectives, and how can I get involved?
- ? Can you tell me what characteristics your ideal candidate would have?
- ? Are there any other academic resources that the scholarship provides?
- ? Does your organization sponsor any programs for job placement or connecting with alumni?
- ? Are there any resources or opportunities available through the organisation after I graduate?

Once your questions have been answered, make sure you acknowledge their response.

The day before your interview

Below is a checklist for the day before which will ensure that your interview runs smoothly on the day:

- Set out your clothing in advance.
- Review any instructions provided by the interviewer, including the interview time, where to park and who to find once you arrive.
- Gather any documents that you need to take along (if applicable).
- Review and time your travel route to the interview so that you arrive in good time.

- Set multiple alarms, including one when you need to start getting ready and another for when you need to start traveling to the location.

Ultimately, you need to get as much done and in order as possible the day before, particularly since being late to a scholarship interview will not make a good impression.

The day of your interview

A checklist for the day of:

- Get ready, make sure you are fresh, well-groomed and have eaten.
- Review the route and ensure there is no traffic that will disrupt your travel time.
- Ensure you have all the required documents.
- Leave enough time to arrive at the interview location at least 15 minutes early. Planning to be early will give you buffering time if there is traffic, you get lost or you need time to settle yourself before the interview starts.
- Stay calm!

During the interview

All your planning and preparation is about to pay off! There are however, a few things to remember during the interview that will help to ensure your success.

1. Be on time!
2. Stay calm and be yourself. You are here because the panel has already been impressed by your application. There is no need to over-think or become anxious – they already like you!
3. Offer a firm handshake, smile and keep your head up high.
4. Eye contact is very important.
5. Breathe! Allow yourself to pause, and talk at an appropriate pace. Try to avoid words such as “um” and “like”.
6. Think before you speak. It is very important to listen during the interview and not anticipate the questions. You may have prepared and think you know what is coming, but it is important to be attentive and listen carefully.
7. Respond in a clear and concise manner. Once the question has been asked, it is important to respond appropriately. Avoid reciting what you have prepared and instead let the interview flow naturally.
8. Stay on topic and do not ramble.
9. Enunciate your words clearly.
10. Answer honestly. Interviewers can tell when you are embellishing or making up answers to impress them.
11. Enjoy the moment. You have worked hard to be here, enjoy it!
12. Conduct yourself as though you are the best candidate and are deserving of the award. It is not easy to judge whether the interview is going well. The interviewers may not show any emotion towards your responses. Do not let this influence your responses or behaviour during the interview.
13. Conclude the meeting on a positive note. Shake the hands of everyone who participated in the interview, look them in the eyes and acknowledge them by name. Thank them for their time and consideration. Let them know that you are available if there are any follow-up questions.

We wish you the best of luck!

The article below was published in the Sunday Independent by Khanyile Mlotshwa, a current Canon Collins Scholar from Zimbabwe, studying for a PhD in Media Studies. It serves to illustrate the transformative power of a scholarship.

A helping hand beyond iron curtain of isolation

Posted on June 15, 2018 by The Independent in Entertainment

I belong to a generation of students that witnessed the beginning of the commercialisation of Zimbabwe's university education.

I was meant to embark on my final year at the National University of Science and Technology (NUST) in August 2008 when the government, in admission that it could not continue to fund university students, introduced tuition fees.

There was an uproar and serious disturbances on campus, students smashed windows at the administration building and engaged in serious running battles with the riot police. This was in the early days of the first semester that begins in August/September. I had just completed my internship at the Sunday News. I still went to the Sunday News where I continued to contribute as a sit-in correspondent.

One Friday after the disturbances on campus, the then Minister of Higher and Tertiary Education, the late Dr Sikhanyiso Ndlovu, came to address the Press Club on the matter. The minister said Zimbabweans should not imagine that the government had completely abandoned university students as it still subsidised their education in many ways as it still paid lecturers and annually set aside money for other university operations.

He was right.

However, after some years of being “paid to read” we were also right in feeling abandoned and pointing out that some families could not afford to pay the levied tuition fees.

In the following years, we have seen an unprecedented level of the commercialisation of higher education in the country with some universities having double intakes in January and August, of double classes; the conventional and the parallel. We have observed the creation of block programmes and many master's degrees where what matters most is paying the school fees over the merit of one's academic agenda.

Sadly, we have seen how some Advanced Level graduates from poor families, even after getting good points, never considered going to university because their parents would still be struggling to take their siblings through primary and secondary education. These parents cannot afford to pay for university students as well. There are few scholarships and grants in Zimbabwe as university education is one of the least funded sectors in the country, both by the government and the private sector.

However, this has opened a situation where those who can afford in financial terms go to university even if they have poor grades and their academic performance does not fit at that level. These are the eager consumers of the many dubious block programmes, especially civil servants who have access to bank loans.

The introduction of university fees in 2008, the year that marked the climax of Zimbabwe's economic challenges, lives on as a moment that taught us the cost of education in vulgar financial terms. It was especially a rude awakening for those of us who aspired to do postgraduate degrees.

Continuing at the National University of Science and Technology (NUST) was out of choice for many reasons. The MSc degree was just starting at NUST and I had no confidence in something new (like that). Importantly, I had been inspired by one of my lecturers to desire to study at Rhodes University, the premier journalism school in Africa. I remember joking that, even if it is to attend to the lawn, I have to be at Rhodes University!

I had been attracted to Rhodes University when I was still an A Level student. I remember studying the university's prospectus. Back then I was attracted to Creative Writing and Drama Studies. In my teenage years, I was a budding writer who wrote so many poems to my sister on her birthdays on 1 May every year. My sister would type the poems and treasured them a lot and that, for me, validated my talent more than publishing.

Our lecturer not only told us inspiring stories about Rhodes University, but he also escalated the quality of what he was teaching us. That convinced some of us that we had to be at Rhodes sometime in future. Rhodes University became a dream. However, if the cost of education at NUST was too much for us, what about the cost of education at Rhodes University?

I recall looking at numerous possibilities, in terms of scholarships, that could help me fund my postgraduate studies out of the country. However I was not eligible for most scholarships mostly because of my Zimbabwean citizenship. For example, Zimbabwe had pulled out of the Commonwealth, accusing the grouping of the UK and its former colonies of being a colonial club. I could not apply for the Commonwealth scholarships.

However, one scholarship got my attention. I remember that in 2011, I filled out a Canon Collins Trust scholarship form but did not submit it. I had failed to finish it on time for submission. I however worked on it and told myself that I will submit it the following year. In 2012, a Canon Collins staffer, whom I was so happy to meet again at this year's Scholars Conference in Cape Town, interviewed me over the phone. I was so happy to get the scholarship. I remember that I received the news while in Windhoek, Namibia attending a journalism workshop.

Attending Rhodes University's Master of Arts (MA) course on a Canon Collins scholarship has exposed me to a world that I never knew existed. Even in my wildest dreams of studying at Rhodes University, I never imagined that I will be enthralled by the library. I soon realised that, to a postgraduate (research) student, the library is the most important space, if not the space, at university. The Rhodes University library drew me to interesting worlds. I remember remarking to a friend that, "if the academic project we are pursuing at Rhodes University is a religion, then the library is the Mecca of that faith".

The Canon Collins scholarship meant that I could be at a place where I would sit in a Master Class conducted by Achille Mbembe, Lewis Gordon, Michael Neocosmos, and other world class scholars whose experiments with social theory warmed the cold ivory tower.

These are scholars who made feel as if I had sat at the feet of Frantz Fanon or Karl Marx.

When Canon Collins, once again picked me for PhD funding at the University of KwaZulu-Natal (UKZN), I could only look forward to the Scholars' conferences that the Trust holds annually.

This year's conference was epic and once again in a direct way Canon Collins sought to change my thinking and understanding of how the world works in a more direct way.

Listening to Professors Pumla Gqola and Thuli Madonsela, and the most exciting advocate Tembeka Ngcukaitobi shifted my thinking in a strong way.

The most important gift that Canon Collins Trust, who reached for me beyond that curtain of Zimbabwe's decade of hardships, bestowed on me are Thuli Madonsela's counsel that, "as long as there is injustice anywhere, there can't be sustainable peace anywhere. As long as there poverty anywhere, there can't be sustainable prosperity anywhere."

It is a gift am too happy to bestow to the future of my community, my country and our world by joining other young people to build a just, inclusive and fair world. ”
